

Historian examines past to learn, improve future

by Donna Brown
Hill Top Times staff writer

Dave Kendziora examines the past to improve the future.

The writer and historian has worked at Hill AFB for eight years documenting what happens at Hill each fiscal year, and why.

"To be a warrior means to fly and fight. In this business, if the airplane doesn't fly, you can't fight," he said. Mr. Kendziora is responsible for history specifically concerning F-16 and F-4 fighter aircraft. He pointed out that the work done at Hill affects and involves people on a nation wide and a world wide level. "Here, you get involved in all aspects of defense and the logistics of defense," he said. "You don't actually fight, you work to prevent fighting."

The history office is the only office at Hill authorized to keep files and information longer than five years. In fact, they are required to keep history information forever. Mr. Kendziora's job involves reviewing file after file of information regarding the aircraft which transpired during the previous fiscal year. He also analyses the information he collects about important events, important people, facilities, equipment, and much more. He researches problem areas to help pinpoint mistakes and to help future generations benefit from today's lessons learned.

"We factualize, we analyze and . . . improve upon the present by reviewing the past. The point is that in the year 2000 or 3000 this information will only be available through the history office," Mr. Kendziora said. "We help to perpetuate the esprit de corps, and specific accomplishments of today for the warriors of tomorrow."
