Arts Festival director wants arena delayed

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Utah Arts Festival's executive director has asked Utah Jazz owner Larry Miller to push back the starting date of construction for his newly financed arena, or the festival could get off to a costly and rocky start.

However, Miller says the timetable to build the arena is strict, and festival organizers have known that all along.

Director Linda Bonar hopes to meet with Miller early this week to discuss deferring the start of construction of the new arena for the NBA team and Salt Lake Golden Eagles minor league hockey franchise to June 24, the end of the five-day festival.

The new arena will be built on the block bordered by South Temple 300 West, 100 South and 400 West and will be financed with a $66 million construction loan provided by a Japanese wholesale bank.

This year's arts festival will be at the Triad Center just north of the new arena on 300 West, and organizers had planned to use some space in the construction area, Bonar said.

Unique sting results in drug lab charges

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A 43-year-old Pennsylvania man was arrested over the weekend after authorities videotaped a man setting up an illegal drug laboratory inside a police station.

In what's been called a first-of-its-kind sting operation, officers from several federal, state and local drug operations transported a former pharmacy student in the trunk of a car to the police station in downtown Salt Lake City.

There, a man set up the drug lab for officers who videotaped the entire episode. He was arrested at 3 a.m. Saturday.

Police have not identified the man, but he is scheduled to be arraigned in federal court today.

The sting culminates three months of investigation. Officials learned that the man, who was in the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Salt Lake City earlier, had been recruiting patients to help in his lab.

Undercover officers told the suspect they wanted him to teach them how to produce drugs, said West Valley Police officer Terry Keefe. The suspect agreed, providing he got 50 percent of their take.

Keefe said officials were concerned about public safety because some chemicals used to make methamphetamines are highly explosive. So rather than rent a warehouse or residential home for the operation, Keefe decided to use the police station.

Six bodies recovered from plane wreckage

ASPEN, Colo (AP) — The bodies of six Utahns killed in the crash of a private plane in a remote area of the Rocky Mountains have been recovered from the wreckage, Pitkin County sheriff's officers say.

The remains likely will be turned over to the victims' families today after examinations by the county coroner, said sheriff's spokesman Bud Eylar.

The single-engine Piper Cherokee crashed April 28 at the 11,800-foot level near Lonesome Lake, just below the Continental Divide.

Killed were pilot David Porter and passengers Vern and Anne Schmidt, Maureen Polette and Kathy Ashby, all of Salt Lake City, and Kelley Carlson of Centerville. The female passengers were members of the Salt Lake-based Mountain Jubilee Sweet Adelines Chorus. They were traveling to Colorado Springs for a regional barbershop quartet competition.

Recovery of the bodies had been hampered from the start by weather. Rescuers were able to go into the site earlier and mark the location of the bodies but were unable to recover them because of unstable snow.

Owens seeks support for cold fusion funds

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Rep. Wayne Owens, D-Utah, has turned to colleagues in a campaign to gain congressional support for $2 million in designated funding for cold fusion research.

Owens has asked fellow members of Congress in a "dear colleague" letter to join him in calling on Rep. Tom Bevill, chairman of the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Energy and Water Development, to support the funding request.

"It doesn't make sense to virtually ignore cold fusion," Owens said. "There's simply too much potential at stake."

The $2 million would be shared with universities around the nation, but since the University of Utah is far ahead in its research, "I believe it would properly get the lion's share," he said.

So far, only about $1 million has been devoted to cold fusion by the Department of Energy's Advance Energy Program, Owens said.

Syracuse due for water overhaul

By DONNA BROWN
Standard-Examiner correspondent

SYRACUSE — The city's culinary water system is due for a major overhaul and officials have given the city engineer the go-ahead to prepare a $1.6 million renovation.

If the renovation takes place Syracuse residents could see a $2.66 increase in their monthly water bills.

Syracuse will pay $3,000 to Don Olsen of Harrocks/Corollo Engineers of Salt Lake City to explore upgrading and funding options to increase the city's culinary water storage capacity and to install three larger main water lines.

In 1988, the city hired private engineering consultant Michael L. Aldrich to help develop a five-year master plan to upgrade the system, said City Administrator Mike Moyes.

Aldrich told the city its 1-million-gallon water storage capacity was not enough to support the city of about 5,000 in the event of a major fire. The report recommends upgrading storage to at least 3 million gallons.

"We probably haven't had the water required (to fight a major fire) for 10 years," Mayor DeLore Thurgood told the city council Tuesday.

Moyes said the report also mentioned three water lines that needed to be larger.

Olsen suggested two sources of financing for the water project — the Utah Safe Drinking Water Committee and the state Division of Water Resources.

Officials say the two entities fund projects at interest rates from zero to 7 percent.

Both entities fund projects on a first-come, first-served basis. Olsen said if the city waits until funds from those agencies run dry, it may have to borrow the money from another source at higher interest rates.

Thurgood said he would rather subject residents to a small increase in their monthly water bills now than "wait until we're behind a power curve and have to clip them 20 bucks."

Syracuse residents currently pay an average of $10 per month for culinary water. If the $1.6 million project were funded at 5 percent for 30 years, it would mean about a $2.66 increase per home.

Olsen said he will also look into obtaining grants to help with the costs.

push for Jim, and I get about a five-minute response time," Lawrence said of local and state Republican leaders stumping for Hansen.

"I'm kind of taken aback that there is such an effort to try to go into the conventions and stack them as much as possible with delegate support of Jim."

Lawrence said his candidacy has brought out Republican Gov. Norm Bangerter who has made rare appearances at the off-year conventions to endorse Hansen.

"He just says he's visiting to become acquainted, but people should see through that," Lawrence said.

He said he has attempted to get Hansen to discuss issues facing the 1st Congressional District during local conventions, but Hansen has refused.

"A political consultant said he doesn't have to debate me, he just pretends I don't exist," Lawrence said. "That's a strategy for winning but it's not best for the district, regardless of who wins."

Hansen, Bangerter and other GOP chiefs have avoided mentioning Lawrence in convention speeches. Instead, they have concentrated on Democratic Rep. Wayne Owens, who is seeking re-election in Utah's 2nd District.

"That's a red herring," Lawrence said. "There's not one registered voter in the 1st District who can vote against Wayne Owens.

"He (Hansen) is taking the focus away from the district and trying to focus on people's emotions and bitterness toward Wayne Owens."

Hansen's Democratic opponent is Bountiful attorney Kenley Brunsdale, a former administrative assistant to Owens.

Student achievers

SCHOLARSHIP RECIPIENT: Heidi Taylor of Ogden has received a $500 scholarship from Pi Beta Phi Fraternity for women. She is a student at the University of Utah where she is majoring in accounting and German. She is the daughter of James E. and Barbara Taylor of Ogden.

GRADUATE: Kristin Newbold, formerly of Ogden, has completed requirements for a master's degree in business and informational systems at Utah State University. She is a graduate of Bonneville High and received her bachelor's degree from USU. She is the daughter of Otte J. Newbold of Logan, and Eldon and Renee Edgar of Ogden.

Ogden man arrested after Sunday fight

OGDEN — A 28-year-old Ogden man was arrested Sunday night on charges of hitting another man in the head with a baseball bat during a fight.

Police were called to 2815 Adams Ave. shortly after 7 p.m. responding to a report of a fight.

Once there, police found Ogden resident Richard D. Yoder, 37, bleeding from a cut above his left eye for which he refused medical treatment, according to a report filed by Officer Rudy VanBeekum.

A fight began earlier, apparently over an alleged debt. Witnesses told police Yoder was hit in the head three times with a bat or club.

Police recovered a 32-ounce bat and an 18-inch club at the scene. The Ogden man was arrested later Sunday evening.

Faulty heat tape blamed in fire

PLEASANT VIEW — Firefighters say faulty heat tape caused a Sunday morning fire in a vacant mobile home.

An alarm was called in at 1:42 a.m. for a fire at the North Valley Village mobile home park at 2700 N. 1700 West, said North View Fire Chief Terrel Call.

Smoke and fire was showing at the home in spot 257, but most of the damage was confined to a hall closet, Call said. There were no injuries. The mobile home was being used to store supplies for the park and the owner has not yet been identified, Call added.

Damage was estimated at $8,000.

According to a study completed in 1989 by the engineering firm of Parsons, Brinckerhoff, Quade & Douglas, the 12-mile stretch of road from South Weber to Shepard Lane in Farmington has a death rate four times what it should be under relatively ideal conditions.

Having motorists use their headlights, Schilling said, allows oncoming vehicles to be seen easier during the daylight.

"With my experience in law enforcement, headlights are seen easier on emergency vehicles in the daylight than the red and blue lights on overhead light bars," he said.

David K. Miles, UDOT engineer for traffic and study, said the zone can be done, adding, however, "... there is a great deal of doubt whether it will accomplish anything."

Miles said a stretch of Interstate 15 near Nephi was marked as a daylight safety zone while improvements were being made, but there are no statistics to prove it reduced the accident rate.

Also, he said, "I don't know if we have the legal authority to make it mandatory."

The only benefit Miles said he can see coming from the proposal stems from a standpoint of a good public relations effort. This would show a cooperation between the state, the agency suggesting the plan and the community, he said.

Miles said he will discuss the proposal with UDOT engineers before making a decision.

To get support for his idea, Schilling said he also mailed a copy of his letter requesting the zone to Sgt. Larry Green, coordinator of the Davis County "Arrive Alive" campaign.

"I think its an excellent idea," Green said. "I think it will work."

Green, who has been with the sheriff's office for 23 years, said he believes the headlight zone is needed and because of the minimal cost involved of implementing the plan, it has a "pretty good chance" of getting the support of state road officials.

Green said he has never seen any safety zones in Utah that require headlights during the day, but he remains optimistic U.S. 89 may be the first.

structures, making it possible for the refuge's five pools to be flushed twice to purge the salt water. Each pool holds about the same amount of water as Mantua Reservoir.

Trout said it would have taken at least $100,000 in government appropriations to do the same work, not including the cost of manpower.

Along with the $35,000, Ebeling said many local companies and businesses have donated or given substantial discounts for materials, supplies and rental of equipment, sometimes with an operator included.

"Without the contributions received, we'd be out there with our bare hands," Ebeling said.

Other government agencies also are assisting. Duane Huber, a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service officer from Kearney, Neb., has been on loan to the refuge with his grader for two weeks.

Trout said he worked with Huber in Nebraska for 12 years and that he is "the best." The Nebraska district is paying Huber's salary while he is here. The Bear River refuge will pay his expenses and provide fuel for the grader.

Huber, who has worked mostly on the dikes, said what he has done in two weeks "isn't even a scratch" to what still needs to be done. He said he'd like to stay for another three years, comparing restoration of the refuge to a birth.

Once the refuge is restored, things will get into a routine again, Huber said, but until then, it will be exciting to see the way nature re-establishes the area.

Birds are returning to the refuge and volunteers have built nesting platforms and eagle perches.

But there is still much to be done, refuge officials said. Volunteers recently planted 500 pounds of bulrush seed, but Ebeling said 85 percent of the refuge is barren.

"We're not done yet," Ebeling said. "We need money and muscle."

Work on the 43 miles of dikes at the facility is an ongoing project. Fences and gates need to be completed, and the lake level and water levels in the various units have to be constantly monitored. Debris must be gathered and burned, three towers destroyed by the ice need to be pulled out and noxious plants have to be controlled.

several years."

Beal also cited the agency's Eagle Club as a factor in the increased funds, with membership doubling to 3,000 during this last campaign. Designation as an Eagle Club member requires a minimum donation of $250.

"When people get a little recognition they tend to give more generously," he said.

The Northern Utah organization contributes to 87 agencies along the Wasatch Front, including the local chapter of the American Red Cross, the Your Community Connection and the Boy Scouts of America.

Utah's Combined Federal Campaign increased its 1989 fundraising total 32.2 percent from last year, representing the biggest CFC increase in the nation, said local campaign coordinator Noel Schvaneveldt.

Schvaneveldt said the fall 1989 campaign pulled in $1.6 million, compared with last year's fundraising total of $1.2 million.

He said much of the increase is due to the first-time statewide coordination of the campaign last year.
